

An eccentric American family led by a precocious 12-year-old prodigy named Victor takes a European vacation and the continent will never be the same. Enjoy the Poppers' zany adventures as they sleuth out a mystery in this comic novel by Neil Hummasti.

Other publishers raved about it!

"...charming and pretty hilarious. I've been enamored enough with the pure verve of the writing to keep going despite the outlandishness of the story."

G.P.PUTNAM'S SONS

"This is a high-energy story and Mr. Hummasti is a talented author."

WILLIAM MORROW

"Hummasti is a unique talent - both amusing and quirky."

DOUBLEDAY

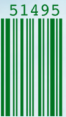

"I found it hysterically, laugh-out-loud funny, and I thought the writing was razor-sharp and extremely witty.

It was so well written with such engaging characters."

THOMAS DUNNE BOOKS

In 2011, Astoria resident Neil Hummasti died from cancer. He left behind over half a million words of unpublished writing, perhaps the greatest trove of its kind in Oregon literary history. Svensen Pioneer Press presents phase one of publishing Neil's writing, which includes I See London, I See France.... For more information on this extraordinary author, visit www.NeilHummasti.com
